STORY OF ETHEL LENEVE TOLD BY HER FATHER

The early life of Ethel Leneve, the girl who sprang into notoriety as the to cause me to be suspicious that things pen, accused of the murder of his wife at home was that of a happy, light-hearttemperament, all have been the subjects the street, and yet an hour later would of conjecture in the press. "When she was only a few years old we removed from Diss to London. By this time her sister Nina had been borneleven months after Ethel-and we sent both to a private school. Their progress was not very satisfactory, and we removed them to a boarding school. At night, however, they attended a continuation school, and Ethel, in particular, showed remarkable quickness in learning typewriting, shorthand, French, German and Latin.

"Ethel was a singularly intelligent girl, and she formed impressions of life which proved that she was wise beyond her years. 'I think if I ever marry,' she said to her mother and myself one day, 'it will be with an old man-a man much older than myself. All the young men I see seem to be so foppish, and to have nothing in their heads but thoughts of dress and amusement.

"At last the time came when it was necessary to choose some calling in life for the girls, and, naturally, we decided to turn their skill at shorthand to advantage. About this time an advertisement appeared for an expert short-hand clerk and typist for the Drouet Institute for the Deaf. I wrote a letter in reply to the advertisement, but did not mention the name of the daughter I wished to obtain the situation for. "Nina, although younger, was more elf-reliant than Ethel, and she begged to be allowed to apply for the place. Consequently, it was Nina, and not Ethel, who obtained the situation. "One day the principal told Nina that business was increasing to such an ex-tent that the female staff must be enlarged. She secured the post for her greatly increasing his capital.

"Accordingly, he embarked on other enterprises which, for the purposes of this story, it is unnecessary to specify. But he had seen Ethel's business capabilities, and he engaged her as his confidential typist and secretary.
